Fatty liver disease, often associated with obesity, insulin resistance and diabetes mellitus, is a multifactorial disorder that includes metabolic derangements and the development of non-alcoholic fatty liver disease (NAFLD). NAFLD has been recognized as the most common chronic liver disease and represents the hepatic manifestation of metabolic syndrome. An altered lipid composition in the liver may be correlated with NAFLD. We tested the hypothesis that patients with NAFLD have altered erythrocyte membrane lipid composition. The lipid composition of erythrocytes from 10 patients with biopsy proven non-alcoholic steatohepatitis (NASH) was compared to that of 9 healthy individuals. Erythrocyte membranes were extracted and levels of glycerophospholipids, triacylglycerol and cholesterol were quantified using high performance thin layer chromatography coupled with densitometry. Our data showed no significant differences in the levels of total glycerophospholipids, triacylglycerol and cholesterol between the two groups. However,
