The clinical and proctoscopic characteristics of 239 patients with haemorrhoids were evaluated and related to stool frequency. The overall incidence of haemorrhoids among women was much higher than that of men (61.9 vs. 27.5%), and the incidence increased with age. Those with bleeding were more likely to have a shorter duration of illness and larger amounts of prolapse. With regard to the location and degree of haemorrhoids, more than half of the patients (52.1%) had proctosigmoid involvement, and the incidence of acute haemorrhoid was higher. Sixty-seven percent of patients with proctosigmoid involvement had more than two haemorrhoids. There was no relationship between the degree of haemorrhoids or prolapse and stool frequency.

Q: Is there any need to update a table row if a column already contain the same data in another table? Is there any way to update a table row if a column already contain the same data in another table? I have two table like this: Table users: id(Primary Key) username name mobile email password Table name: id username surname name mobile email password I want to know if there is any way to update the row if it's already contain the same data in another table? If there is, what would be the SQL query? A: I'm assuming that the user table's id is AUTOINCREMENTing, because it seems that you only care about those two fields: Id Username What you need to do is a join: Update t1 set t1.col1 = t2.col1, t1.col2 = t2.col2 from users t1 join name t2 on t1.username = t2.username where t1.id = 1 In a push for the United States to join UN climate talks after 04aeff104c
